

One important need of the Institution in his opinion was a Ladies Hall, and considerable of his time was spent in the east in securing funds for this. There he obtained a good share of those which were used to erect that building, which was put up in 1882-4 and named "Herrick Hall," in honor of him. It is a four story building containing modern conveniences, and cost $16,500.00

It was during his time that the Indian training school did its main work at Forest Grove, although it began this work a little before Dr. Herrick was chosen president, and closed it a after he resigned.

Captain M. C. Wilkinson planned the idea of having a school of this kind on this coast similar to the one which captain R. W. Pratt established at Carlisle in Pennsylvania. Consequently in 1879 he requested of the Trustees that this school be established in connection with T. A. and P. U. The Trustees favored the idea, sent a request to Washington that this be done, and it was done. The school was opened in February 1880, the Institution granting it the use of a block of land in Forest Grove for the purpose. The question soon arose however, what the words "in connection with T. A. and P. U.", meant, and it was found that they meant nothing as far as any authority was concerned over the school, for as long as the Indian Department furnished all the funds for sustaining it, it proposed to have complete authority over it. The trustees accepted this, only exercising a fatherly supervision over it, by sending a committee annually to visit it, which made a report to the trustees, and they in turn sent their impressions of it to the Indian Department. These were generally commendatory as the school proved to be a success. Government after a few years wished to make it more permanent by owning the land on which the buildings stood, and also a farm on which the Indian boys might work. At this time some people at Salem conceived the idea of removing it to some place near that City. The trustees promised to deed the land on which the buildings stood to government if the school should be allowed to remain at Forest Grove, and others in the vicinity offered to give land for other uses of the school, but the people of Salem offered far more land, and so in 1885 the school was removed to Chemawa, near Salem. One of the main buildings erected for the school was burned a short time before the removal, and the other has since been fitted up for a boys' dormitory and boarding house. Here some of the young men have clubbed together, and thus boarded themselves for from a dollar and a quarter to a dollar and a half a week.

Here should be a picture of the Boys' Dormitory as on p. 28 of Heart of Oak, 1894.

During his presidency, Professors Marsh, Ferrin and Lyman continued their work in the college, while M. J. McMahon was principal of the Academy, 1882-4, and Miss Carson continued in charge of the Ladies Department until 1884.

In 1883, however, President Herrick resigned and went East.

Here should be a picture of Pres. Ellis, from photo.

Soon after his resignation Rev. J. F. Ellis, pastor of the Plymouth Congregational church of Seattle was elected Vice-President