"Summer In The Bernese Oberland"

by D. Michael McCarthy

Oil, 28" x 22"

"Color is the music of painting," says landscape artist D. Michael McCarthy. "It is one of the deepest strains of my life." He successfully imparts the reverence he holds for nature to each painting through his vigorous use of color, giving each scene tremendous energy and power. McCarthy travels up to six months of each year, getting in touch with the elements of nature that truly inspire him. Although McCarthy loved art as a young boy, he didn't know it could be a viable means to make a living and studied business in college. But it wasn't long before his creative energy tugged at his soul and drew him back to art. He says, "I touched something deep-seated in me, and I began drawing and painting everything in sight. It was as though I had been born again, as if I'd arrived home." He went on to earn a bachelor of fine arts degree from Fontbonne College in St. Louis, and has since remained true to his calling.
