SALEM, OREGON 97310

The purpose of this pamphlet is to provide essential information about the Oregon Legislative Assembly. This includes information about both leadership and membership of the Oregon House and the Oregon Senate and a description about how a bill becomes a law. Also included are maps of the various House of Representative and Senatorial districts.

We wish to acknowledge the assistance of the Oregon Secretary of State and cooperation of this office in making use of material which also appears in the Oregon Blue Book.

Many persons viewing their first meeting of a state legislative body do not know what is happening. It is the purpose of this pamphlet to give guidance to persons who are viewing and reviewing this process first-hand in the Oregon Legislature.

For additional information, the Oregon Legislature has other publications which provide more detailed descriptions and illustrations. These include the daily Legislative Calendar, The Weekly Bill Digest, The Oregon Legislative Handbook and the pamphlet, Your Legislature.

Session Schedule

Oregon's Legislature convenes regularly in the State Capitol at Salem the second Monday in January in each odd-numbered year (January 8, 1973-January 13, 1975). No limitation is set on the length of the session, but within the past few years adjournment has come after four to five months. (The governor is empowered to convene special sessions and there have been 14 such sessions—the most recent in 1971, which lasted 7 days.)

Senate and House

Two houses comprise the Legislature—the Senate and the House of Representatives. The 30 members of the Senate are elected for four-year terms with half of the seats up for election biennially. The House has 60 members, all of which must be elected biennially. Except in the case of persons selected to fill vacancies in office, the members of the Legislative Assembly are elected by the voters of designated 30 senatorial and 60 representative districts at the regular general election held throughout the state in even-numbered years.

To qualify as a candidate for Senator or Representative, one must be a citizen of the United States, 21 years of age and an inhabitant for at least one year in the district where he is elected.

Functions

The Legislature's two primary functions are to enact laws and to furnish an arena for discussion. The Legislature also has influence in some decisions of the Executive Department. The Senate, for example, confirms appointments by the Governor to certain offices specified by law.

The Legislative Assembly exercises its law-making authority subject to the people's powers of initiative and referendum. This means that the Legislature shares with the people its power to enact laws. The Governor has veto power over legislation enacted during a session, but he may not veto an Act referred for a vote of the people or an Act initiated by the people.

A presiding officer is elected by each house of the Legislative Assembly. This officer in the Senate is called the President; and in the House, the Speaker. The President and the Speaker exercise general powers over their House; appoint chairmen, vice chairmen and members to each committee; and make the decisions regarding the appropriate committee to which a bill is to be referred.

Committees

Oregon's Legislature operates under the "open committee system," which enables interested persons to voice their opinion on measures of particular interest. Each legislator serves on several committees. Almost 2,000 bills covering a wide range of subjects are introduced each session, with nearly half of these destined to become law. Most of the work of consideration and revision of these bills is done in committee.

After a bill has been processed by a committee and passed in the chamber in which it was introduced, it is sent to the other chamber where a similar procedure is followed. When both chambers have passed a bill, including any amendments approved by the other chamber, it is enrolled (printed in final form) for the signature of the presiding officers and the Governor.

Bill Enactment

A bill may become law the instant it is signed by the Governor if it has an emergency clause; otherwise it becomes law 90 days after adjournment. By constitutional provision, tax measures may not have an emergency clause. Oregon is the only state of the fifty which assures the people of this right to refer a tax measure by petition before it goes into effect.

Oregon's Constitution provides that the state must not spend money in excess of its revenues. Therefore, the Legislative and Executive Branches must balance the budget. After reviewing, and often revising, the Governor's proposed budget each session, the Legislature passes tax laws which produce revenue needed, then appropriates these funds to state agencies, to local government and to education.

An orientation conference for all new members of the Legislative Assembly is arranged by the Committee prior to each legislative session to acquaint members with the procedures to be followed and the issues they will be facing in the coming session. The Committee has adopted and is implementing a long-range plan for modernizing the interior of the Capitol for better legislative usage and more accessibility by the public.

Studies being conducted by the Committee include ways to reduce the number of state publications; means to improve the staffing of legislative committees; reorganization of responsibilities for processing and distributing legislative publications and how better to maintain and improve legislative records for public usage.

LEGISLATIVE COUNSEL COMMITTEE

Research service may be provided legislative committees at their request.

The Committee may, upon written request, review state agency rules. Through the Law Improvement Committee, the Committee conducts a continuous substantive law revision program.

During each regular legislative session the Committee is responsible for the publication and distribution of the advance sheets of the session laws. The Committee staff prepares, for publication in the legislative calendars and journals, indexes and tables pertaining to all measures introduced. Immediately after a legislative session the staff prepares and publishes a digest of Acts passed, and as soon as possible after the session, publishes and distributes the official session laws.
